ABSTRACT:

The Act of 1935 was an important benchmark in the constitutional history as well as in the national movement of India. It changed, at least for the time being, the politico-constitutional character of the Indian National Congress (hereafter INC). Reeling under the pressure from the pro-reformists and advocates of the office-acceptance group, the INC accepted the scheme of Provincial Autonomy.

Abstract Report: The Title Accurately Said The Study was About.

INTRODUCTION:

The decade of 1930s in India was quite calm in respect of agitation based politics but constitutionally it changed the character of the national struggle and its main carrier, the Indian National Congress (henceforth INC). The Act of 1935 gave the INC along with other national parties an opportunity to translate the message of the national movement, partially, if not wholly, in to reality. In a letter written to Dr. M.A.Ansari, Mahatma Gandhi himself had expressed this view by stating that, "he had no hesitation in welcoming the revival of the Swarajist Party", and the "decision to take part in the legislatures through the forthcoming elections".

CONCLUSION:

As the later days event were to show, working the constitution of under the apparatus of imperialist administration was bound to compromise the congress position as the foremost anti-imperialist force. Several constraints viz., special powers of the Governors, misgivings about the loyalty of the bureaucracy, limited franchise and above all special status given to the reactionary elements, namely landlords and business groups were likely to frustrate the pro-people policies and measures.
