ABSTRACT:

Memory plays an interesting role in deciding the fate of narratives and significantly changes the meaning the text tries to establish. Memory in postcolonial literature also succumbs to such overwhelming power of memory in texts. Memory though may sound an innocent word but is in fact very political which has been well ascertained by the different examinations of the colonial and postcolonial texts.

Abstract Report: The Title Accurately Said The Study was About.

INTRODUCTION:

The text with the gaps, fissures and absences in the narration tries to tell us the true way a colonial work or text works. It is in fact not a work of the psychology of colonialism but a work into the psychology of the colonial text and how these colonial texts establish what they seek to establish. The text allows the reader to come to conclusions and construct meanings by filling up the voids that the author has left for the reader. The gaps are the way to the real meaning, by creating the absences, he throws light on the blatant present. He says more when he says nothing.
