ABSTRACT:

The Kashmir valley is called paradise on earth. It is a small state of India, located on the north end. Kashmir is also playing an important role as a business point of view. Shawl made in Kashmiri are quite famous around the world. These are considered as a symbol of fashion. The shawl industry of Kashmir is pristine sustenance which is given over generation after generation for centuries.

Abstract Report: The Title Accurately Said The Study was About.

INTRODUCTION:

Kashmir shawl used to create three types of fibers - the cashmere, Pashmina, and Shatoosh. Some people believe that cashmere and Pashmina fibers are same but when we talk to the local weavers and businessmen they told us that the cashmere and Pashmina fiber is different depending on its length and thickness. Thick and long fibers from Capra hircus sheep known as cashmere while the soft and small fibers are placed in the category of Pashmina.

CONCLUSION:

According to the study we reached the conclusion that in Kashmir valley, thousand of people are engaged in shawl business for a long time. They produce Pashmina shawls through traditional method by centuries because the fiber used for Pashmina shawl is so delicate to treat with the machine, the weavers told that the Pashmina fiber can't bear the vibration of electronic loom. if anyone told the shawl made on electronic loom it surly the blend.

Conclusion Report: The Text is Rounded off with a Conclusion that Discusses the Implication of The Findings & Ideas Discussed & Their Impact on Future Research Direction.
