ABSTRACT

Tera was the first Heritage Village declared by the government of India. Tera is a picturesque village. It consists of people living in conservative communities. The village is economically stable and the villagers seem to be adequately provided for. However, despite the declaration of the status of Heritage Village, the village fails to attract much attention it deserves. Tera, like many other villages and towns in Kutch, seems to portray a heritage far forgotten and abandoned in the wake of modernization. Tera, is a village in transition.
