ABSTRACT

The paper aims at understanding health of migrant workers at their place of origin in Bihar (India). Migration is a social reality in which push and pull factors are the major determinants. In case of rural Bihar push factors are instrumental in large scale migration of workers. The research literature on Bihar suggests that lowest socio-economic indicators and high population density are primary reasons of the push enabled migration. This research among workers of scheduled caste found them at a double edged road.

REVIEW OF THE ARTICLE

Health Of Migrant Workers: A Study At Worker's Place Of Origin
In Rural Bihar

Manish Kumar

Abstract and Introduction:

The paper aims at understanding health of migrant workers at their place of origin in Bihar (India). The abstract was complete and essential details were presented. Introduction was justifying. Importance of the area under study mentioned clearly in Introduction.

Reference to the Literature and Documentation:

The literature review was up-to-date. The number of references was appropriate and their selection is judicious. The review of the literature was well integrated. The literature was analyzed and critically appraised.

Methodology:

Author mentioned various case studies in the paper. This paper was based on our field study among male migrant workers from a rural block in Bihar. Author randomly selected inter-state migrant workers in Dalsingsarai block of Bihar who had been working outside Bihar for five or more years. They visited home during festivals and special social occasions, i.e., three-four times a year for few weeks, and kept their spouse and children at home in supervision of parents or extended family.

Presentation of Results:

A systematic educational initiative is needed for increasing literacy and skill building among youths at place of origin so that they can join work more in organized sector which can have better benefits for them and less exploitation. The amount of data presented was sufficient and appropriate.

Scientific Conduct:

There were no instances of plagiarism. Ideas and materials of others were correctly attributed.

Relevance:

The study was relevant to the mission of the journal or its audience. The study was worth doing.
