REVIEW OF THE ARTICLE

Post- Structural And Feminist Legal Theory Of Law

Rohini

ABSTRACT:

The problem statement was clear and well articulated. The feminist legal studies discuss the complex role of the law in the subordination of women and also in removing the oppression of women. Law is accepted as a place of liberation of women from exploitation as well as a precursor to social change. It is assumed that law is a place where the disadvantaged people get liberation from exploitation. Law is a means of justice which is impartial and a panacea for all legal obstacles. It is a source of social and political change. It stabilizes society and is helpful in maintaining a just society in which exploitation has no place. It is accepted that law is an instrument of 'social engineering'.

INTRODUCTION:

The introduction provides a good, generalized background of the topic that quickly gives the reader an appreciation. The Feminist Legal theory has redefined the role of law within the private domain of the family and public domain of the civil society. We should focus on how do women perceive justice and how do law and legal discourses make women as subordinate subjects? It also relates to the postmodernism philosophy as its notion of the self-knowledge and truth is problematic to the Enlightenment theory. As, the feminist theory also discloses the constructed truth. There are some issues we need to emphasize as we should analyze the feminist perspective within and out of the society in which we live. In what way the social world effects our lives?
