INTRODUCTION:

The introduction provides a good, generalized background of the topic that quickly gives the reader an appreciation Kundanika, in chapter seventeen, points out clearly where and how women are mistreated. Here, the women characters are shown trampled under the household duties, under the supremacy of their husbands, her unequal income for equal work compared to men and dejection of their hobbies and ambitions. An entire world is kept opened for a man and for a woman her world is restricted to her husband, children and home. Ila Nayakopines, "For centuries, a woman has been ruled by a patriarchal set up. Woman's strength, divinity, fidelity, forsaking and other qualities have been adored and at the same time men have exploited them." Bela's matrimony with Nishant does not result in everlasting blissful companionship either.
